

Character Slogan: Sterling Johnson

Character Description: Self-employed contractor and neighborhood handyman, robbed a bank thirty years ago.

Speech:

Wait a minute...wait a minute...say that again. Did I hear that shit right? "Rightly or wrongly" you're going to tear down Mr. Barlow's house. "Rightly or wrongly"? It don't matter to you if it's wrong? It's got to matter. If it don't matter then nothing don't work. If nothing don't work then life ain't worth living. See, you living in a world where it don't matter. But that's not the world I live in. The world I live in right is right and right don't wrong nobody. I'm painting the house 'cause Mr. Barlow hired me to paint it. You just can't tear down the man's house. That's the kind of shit they did to the Indians. They sign a treaty and soon as the Indians walk out the door they start plotting how to break it. I don't care what the law say. They liable to make a law that say anything. If they got a law say they can tear down his house they can make one say they can tear down yours. Common sense say that. If you fuck with Mr. Barlow's house...if you move one goddamn pebble...you gonna have to answer me on the battlefield. We can deal with this the old-fashioned way. It ain't gone out of style. It just got different levels. See...You the cowboys. I'm the Indians. See who win this war.

Platform:

Slogan:

Reasoning:

